

Simply Supervision

As summer in the Northern Hemisphere moves inevitably toward autumn, many of us are accustomed to thinking about our next learning adventures. Perhaps we are still oriented to the beginning of the school year. In other parts of the world, springtime is just around the corner. Of course, in many areas the weather varies little from month to month. Regardless, it's always a good time to learn.

Are you ready to learn more about you, your clients, and your coaching practice? If so, consider a new supervision group with Sam Magill. Current and past groups comment on the rich and ever deepening exploration. Together, we evoke supervision and the opportunity to support each other in continuing to mature our practices – and our humanity.

Why call it “Simply Supervision”? Because we strive to keep it that way using a vast array of models, metaphors, and magic. Our process is simple – identify something that happened, explore what the sources of that event might be, find new ways of thinking and apply the discoveries to our lives and work.

The result is simple, yet very often profound. A great session ends with participants (including the supervisor) saying, “Wow. I never looked at it that way before.”

I also want to acknowledge that supervisees are currently saying that the greatest benefit of our work is, simply, breathing – taking time out from a pretty crazy world.

Curious? Interested? New groups will begin soon. Write to me and we'll figure out what works best for you. I look forward to hearing from you: sam@sammagill.com.
